

Puget Sound and Salmon Recovery Funding Available in the Nisqually Watershed

The Nisqually Indian Tribe is currently requesting grant proposals for salmon habitat restoration and protection projects in the Nisqually River watershed.

Up to $1.8 million in federal and state funds are available for on-the-ground habitat restoration projects, land acquisitions, or assessments that will lead to projects. The Nisqually Indian Tribe is the lead entity that coordinates the solicitation and ranking of projects for the Nisqually Watershed.

Eligible project proposals will be ranked by the Nisqually River Council and submitted to the state Salmon Recovery Funding Board (SRFB) and the state legislature for funding consideration. Projects that match high priority actions and geographic areas in the Nisqually Watershed's Salmon Recovery strategy will have the best chance of receiving a high ranking and funding.

Eligible applicants for funding include cities/towns, counties, state agencies (with a local partner), conservation districts, tribes, non-profit organizations, special purpose districts, Regional Fisheries Enhancement Groups, and private landowners.

Interested parties must submit a Letter of Intent to the Nisqually Indian Tribe's Natural Resources Office by March 1 and completed applications are tentatively due May 11.

Prospective applicants are strongly encouraged to contact Ashley Von Essen, Lead Entity Coordinator for Nisqually Tribe Natural Resources at (360) 438-8687 ext. 2145 or vonessen.ashley@nisqually-nsn.gov to get information about the Nisqually Salmon
